Slavery in the U. S. Supreme Court.

The News does not fancy the extracts we quoted from Mr. Attorney General BLACK's article in reply to the Douglas-Harperers' on Squatter Sovereignty, and thus seeks to cast doubts on the authority of the Adminstration's Proclamation.

It is very difficult to quote some passage from a pamphlet, recently published in Washington by an anonymous author, who is said to be Judge Black, and to whom it is given to understand others to be James Gordon Bennett, editor of the New York Herald, and it is to be hoped to the latter, the author of the pamphlet can be the latter. Whoever the author of that pamphlet may be, he makes no secret of his desire to have the decision of the Court to sustain it. Such an assertion, in order to obtain credit, must be backed up by proofs on the responsibility of some well known name.

It is perfectly well-known, even to the News, that Judge BLACK, the Attorney General of the United States, is the author of the pamphlet in question. The assertion, therefore, to which we called the News' attention, is made "on the responsibility of some well-known name." The authority of the U. S. Attorney General, on the point involved, is rather better than that of the News. Judge BLACK says, and says truly, that "the President, the judges of the Supreme Court, nearly all the Democratic members of Congress, the whole of the party South, and a very large majority North, are penetrated with a conviction that no such power is vested in a Territorial Legislature."

The dictum of the News is scarcely sufficient to outweigh this mass of Democratic authority.

"No Extraneous Issues."

The National of yesterday holds the following language in regard to the proceedings of the late Democratic State Convention and the issues of the pending campaign:

The party of the Democratic State Convention, notwithstanding the opposition of the leading men, or delegations that was hovering around the Convention, when the State of Wisconsin sent its delegation to the election of delegates, has to be held responsible for the late, the most important, and the most far-reaching of all the measures taken to the latter.

But whatever the author of that pamphlet may be, he makes no secret of his desire to have the decision of the Court to sustain it. Such an assertion, in order to obtain credit, must be backed up by proofs on the responsibility of some well-known name.
